Maurice Berger, the musical drummer, has been discoursing music to his many friends lately quantities to suit. He represents Fiegenbaum & Co., the boss toy makers of the Pacific Coast, and handles the finest line of samples ever brought to this State. Berger can walk through an order as rapidly as he wanders over the piano keys.

Ignorant of the Law.

It transpires that two Frenchmen came to Newhall, Lo. Angeles county recently and in order to clear some land rapidly set fire to the brush, but the flames spread so rapidly that a neighboring piece of timber land was destroyed. They being ignorant of the laws of France and America, supposed that the punishment would be death in boiling oil, and in a few hours their idea had taken such firm hold on them that they concluded the best way was to kill themselves before they were taken by the officers.

They repaired to a tree near the house and seated themselves on the grass, the eldest of the two deliberately put the muzzle of a pistol in his ear and fired, after which he passed the weapon to his brother who immediately shot himself in the head three times. He says he felt no pain but finally fainted and knew nothing more until revived at the hospital. Strange to say, neither of them are dead yet and the physicians say that the younger, who shot himself three times, has a good chance to recover.

SPORTING NEWS.

Johnson the Sprinter and Kehoe's Antagonist.

Of Johnson the runner, who beat the world's record in this city a few weeks ago, the St. Louis Sporting News of a recent date has the following:

H. M. Johnson, American champion sprinter, is lying at death's door at Grass Valley, Cal. Johnson departed for that place about nine days ago to run a local man a 100 yard race. The cause of Johnson is one of the most peculiar known in the sporting world. His father was commander of the port of New York, and before that he was in command of several steamers plying between New York and China. These positions gave him an opportunity to educate his children well, and Harry in this respect was given a good start in life. A few years ago Harry married an estimable young lady of New Orleans, and after his marriage he went to work writing up sporting events for the newspapers. For a long while he was the athletic editor of the Sporting News, and he often spoke of the days he passed in this office as the most pleasant in his life. Pretty soon, however, the old sprinting fever took hold of him and he announced his intention of going out on the road. One day he bade the writer good bye saying he was going to San Francisco and from there to Australia. He would not return, he said, until he had won a world's handicap. Then he would come home with a fortune in his pocket. Leaving his wife and little ones in this city, Harry started for the West. Each day he wrote affectionate letters to his wife and always kept her supplied with ready funds. Pretty soon, however, the letters ceased to come, and the wife began to fear that something had happened to her husband. Then a letter came in a strange hand. It told how the powerful form of the world's greatest athlete was bowed with fever and of how death seemed near at hand. Then another letter came. It was in Harry's handwriting, but the scraggy letters told of the weak and nervous hand that had written it. He wrote: "I am better and will leave for home as soon as I am strong enough. Sprinting has hold of me with a grip as strong as that which drink has on the drunkard. But if God spares me to you and the little ones, I will from this on forever cut loose from professional sprinting." All who knew Johnson will be glad to read of his resolution. As an athlete the world has never known a greater, and but for the fact that he has allied himself with that with that class known as "professional sprinters" his friends would today be legion and he would have the respect and esteem of every honorable athlete in America.

The Post too says:

A sport who arrived today from Virginia City, Nevada states that big Kehoe, the bruiser, who jumped into prominence by defeating Jim Fell, is matched to fight a heavy-weight named McCormack at an early date.

McCormack is said to hail from San Francisco, and as he is keeping quiet and avoiding observation as much as possible the Comstockers are suspicious that some world beater is being rung in on them under an assumed name.

It is not very improbable that the sports of the silver region are right, and the question arises, who can McCormack be? With Joe McMullin in England and Joe Bowers "at the seaside," all the local heavy weights are accounted for. But where is Jack Davis of Omaha? Perhaps Choyinski's late opponent and "McCormack" are identical.
